A. Hamed has a new tablet. He uses it to read stories and play maths games. His father showed him how to send emails to his grandmother in Salalah. He never plays games before homework. At night, the tablet sleeps in a drawer in the living room.

B. In Noor's school, there is a computer lab with twenty computers. Every Tuesday, her class learns how to type and make pictures. The students also learn to stay safe online. They never tell anyone their passwords. Noor loves the lab because the computers are fast and new.

C. Old Mr Rashid bought a smartphone last month. His young grandson taught him how to make video calls on it. Now he talks to his son in Dubai every evening after dinner. He can see his new granddaughter on the screen. Mr Rashid thinks technology is really wonderful.

Robots are machines that can do work for people. In big factories, robots build cars and pack boxes of food and drink. They never get tired, and they can work all day and all night without stopping for a rest. Some robots work in dangerous places, like deep under the sea or inside volcanoes, where people cannot go. In hospitals, small robots carry medicine to the doctors. In some houses, robot vacuum cleaners move on the floor and clean it by themselves. But robots cannot do everything. They cannot feel happy or sad, and they cannot be good friends to children. They only do what people tell them to do. Scientists are making smarter robots every year. Maybe one day, a robot will help you with your homework!
