It was science fair day at Salma's school. Salma and her friend Dalal made a model of the solar system with coloured balls and wire. They worked on it every day after school for two weeks. On the day of the fair, they put their model on a table in the school hall. Many students and parents came to see the projects. There were robots, small cars and a model volcano that made real smoke. The science teacher, Mr Peter, walked around and asked the students questions about their work. At the end of the day, the head teacher gave out the prizes. Salma and Dalal's model won second prize, and they were very happy. Mr Peter said their work was excellent and they should try again next year.
